The biggest one happens in the morning at Girgaum, in south Mumbai. It is dubbed Gudi Padwa in Maharashtra and Ugadi in Andhra Pradesh and Karnataka. The Gudi is adorned with neem leaves, coconuts, marigold flowers and turmeric. Locals wear their finest traditional clothing, many dress up to reflect the reign of great warrior Chhatrapati Shivaji Maharaj. The parade also features sari-clad women riding motorbikes, and more than 50 floats depicting the culture of the state. A visit to this beautiful festival will enable one to collect and cherish memories for lifetime.

This festival has special importance for Sikhs. It is celebrated with gusto and gaiety especially by them because this day commemorates the formation of Khalsa panth by Guru Gobind Singh Ji, the tenth guru of Sikhism. Being a spiritual festival, people dressed in colorful outfits offer prayers in Gurudwaras on this day. One can scout the lively celebrations and cultural performances on this day. In other parts of country, this festival is known by various regional names.

It is celebrated to honor the birth anniversary of Lord Mahavir, the twenty-fourth and last Tirthankara of present Avasarpi??. The idol of Lord Mahavir is carried out on a chariot, in a procession called Rath Yatra. There are no extravagant celebrations during this festival, rather people engage in some sort of charitable act, pujas and fasting. Many devotees visit temples dedicated to Mahavir to meditate and offer prayers.
